Going Into Exile, (2006, South Africa, 24 min.), directed by Peter Se-Puma

Three sisters, Jeanette Ndlovu, Thandi Ndlovu and Granny (Ndlovu) Seape went into exile because of the Apartheid system in South Africa killed their brother. They were determined to seek revenge by overthrowing the white regime. This is the first film ever to give insight into the death of Hastings Ndlovu, the first victim of the June 1976 uprisings.

Soldiers Of The Rock (2003, South Africa, 94 min.), directed by Norman Maake

Vuyo, a business student, returns to the mine not to begin a career but to discover more about his father – a man who died underground and whose last wish was to educate his son so he would never be subjected to the same way of life. Vuyo begins a new education in a world still trumping the traditions of old South Africa. He winds up with the toughest of this tribe, the deep-earth miners, who are desperately proud of their trade and increasingly unsettled by the fact that diminishing gold deposits threaten to end their livelihoods and traditions.
